Public Access Defibrillation - Empowering Everyday People to Save Lives

In most SCA events, the victim is suffering from a heart rhythm disorder called "ventricular fibrillation." This means the victim needs defibrillation, which is administered through an electrical shock to correct the heart's rhythm, and they need it as soon as possible.

other public places, AEDs are saving lives all over the country. They're far more successful than CPR alone, with survival rates up to 70%.

RespondRight can help you start your own public access defibrillation program while complying with the Missouri State Statutes.

Everyday, nearly 1,000 Americans suffer sudden cardiac arrest (SCA). Chances for the victim's survival decrease by 10% every minute after the attack. If the attack happens in your store or office, you're the victim's best chance for survival. Saving this person's life doesn't require a healthcare professional, just the establishment of an early defibrillation program.

Defibrillation is delivered through a device called an automated external defibrillator, or AED. The latest AEDs are remarkably simple to use and with minimal training, anyone can be a life-saver. These lightweight devices talk you through the rescue and show you pictures to remind you how to proceed.

If you work in an office, a store, mall or restaurant, you should have a defibrillator and know how to use it. Think of it this way: you have a fire extinguisher and smoke alarms; you have a telephone to call the police; you have a first-aid kit. You should have a defibrillator.
